Initiatives and Programs to Support and Guide the Academic Progress of International Students

Immersive Internship Program

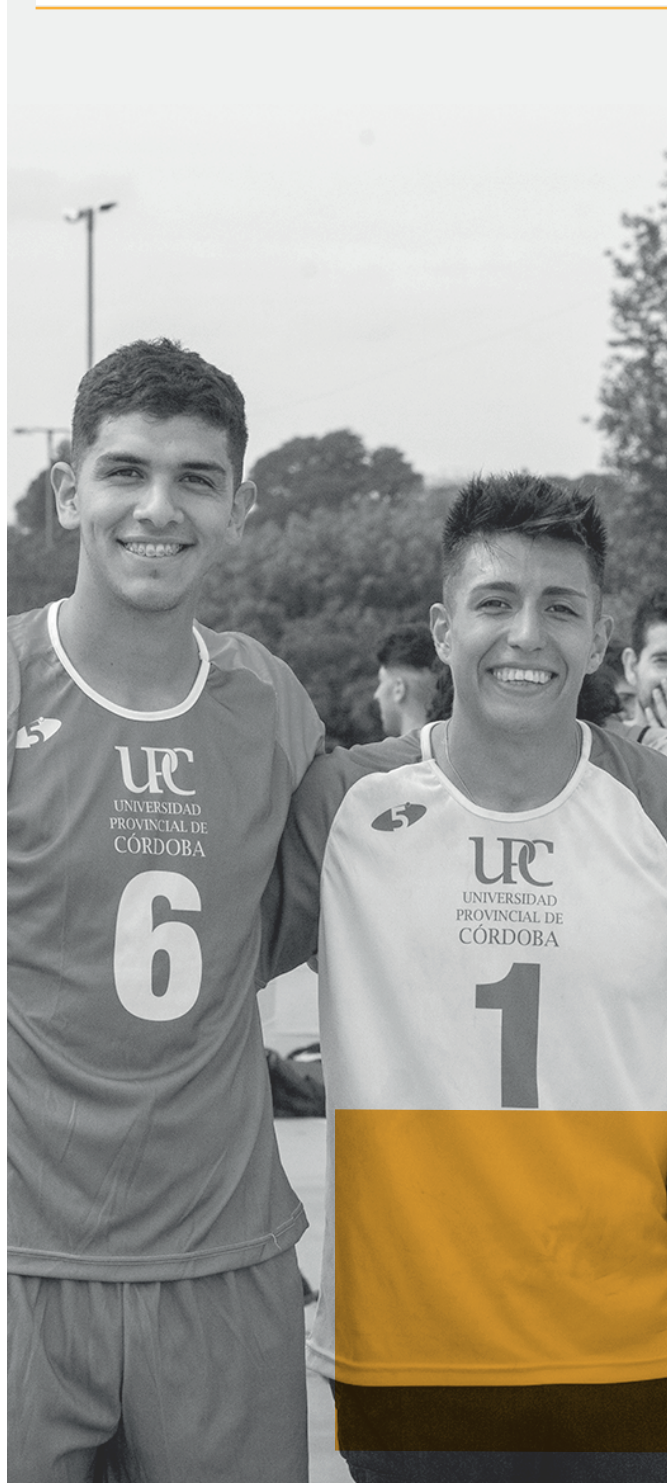

International students are encouraged to stay with a UPC student during their exchange to enhance their immersion in both the academic life at UPC and the local cultural customs.

Peer Mentoring Program

The goal of this program is to aid international students in their academic endeavors and Spanish language acquisition. During the exchange, a student will be designated as the international student's contact person to ensure their successful integration into the academic community.

Territorial Engagement and Recreation Activities Program

The University offers a

Comprehensive Accessibility Program

From a cross-cutting approach, it offers guidance and training to the academic community so that the institutional environments are conceived and designed from the principles of accessibility.

Vocational, Occupational, and Educational Guidance Program (OVOE)

It seeks to support students' educational journeys through listening sessions that address study issues, learning strategies, career concerns, exam difficulties, and other challenges that may be perceived as obstacles to the learning process.

UPC Sports, Physical Activity, and Recreation Program

It provides no-cost, open participation sports and recreational activities for the entire educational community to foster their well-being. These activities are conducted at both UPC campuses and at the "Mario Alberto Kempes" Stadium.

Program on Gender

This space operates from a wide-ranging view of gender and diversity, aiming to promote critical analysis of reality and foster the creation of new meanings that can enhance non-discriminatory relationships and improve people's lives.

Studying and living in Córdoba:

a great experience is waiting for you!

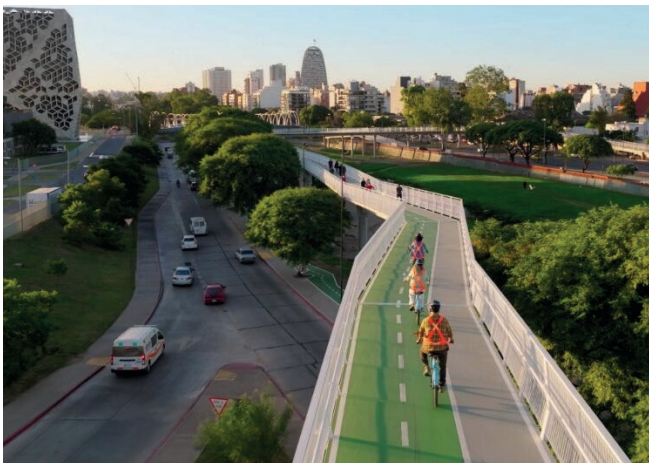

Founded in 1573, Córdoba is the capital of its province and the second-largest city in Argentina by population, following Buenos Aires.

It is the hub of provincial administration and offers a wide range of services, including eight public and private higher education institutions, advanced healthcare facilities, and diverse industrial and service sectors.

Furthermore, the Province of Córdoba is the second most significant in Argentina both demographically and economically. It boasts one of the highest rates of national population growth, establishing it as a central hub for culture, economy, education, finance, and entertainment in the heart of the country.

Córdoba is renowned as a cultural center, often referred to as “Córdoba la Docta” (meaning “the Scholarly”), attracting students from across Argentina, neighboring countries, and around the world. Córdoba is a vibrant city with a significant student population, particularly in the Nueva Córdoba neighborhood, which is close to the historic downtown. The city’s university scene offers a rich array of cultural activities, including shows, art exhibitions, concerts, film screenings, and theatrical performances almost every day and on weekends, contributing to a dynamic student life that is unique in the country. Additionally, within less than an hour from the city, you can explore the distinctive Córdoba mountains and rivers.

The city of Córdoba has been the backdrop for several historically significant events on a national, regional, and global scale. It was the birthplace of the 1918 University Reform, became a major industrial center in the 1930s, and was the site of the Cordobazo uprising in 1969. These iconic moments reflect the city's character and national significance, which make its residents proud.

In 2000, UNESCO designated the Jesuit Block (located in the historical downtown) as a World Heritage site, making it a must-visit landmark.
